The Small Diary of a Little Painter John Ransom Phillips

The re-created autobiography of Bernardino di Betto, also known as Pinturicchio (1454-1513), mostly remembered today as a competent follower of his master, Pietro Perugino. This re-assembled diary is filled with dreams and spiritual reconstructions that recount the artist's associations with many of the influential figures of the Renaissance including Pope Alexander VI, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, Raphael, Savonarola, and Martin Luther. Pinturicchio knew everyone. His downfall was pining for celebrity while ignoring his muse, confirming what Vasari said about him: "He had a greater name than his work deserved."
