The Sanctuary and Perfection Lauri Onjukka

Seventh-day Adventist preachers, teachers, and writers have often dealt with the question of perfection in the context of the end-time following the close of probation (Rev. 22:11). Sincere Bible students have sometimes advanced the theory that members of the waiting remnant will live in a state of sinlessness during that time. The rationale of this belief is often based on an interpretation of what it will mean to “reflect the image of Jesus fully.” Early Writings, p. 71. Lauri Onjukka presents a thoughtful challenge to this viewpoint. He marshals impressive biblical and Ellen White material to prove his position that “obedience, though prompted and sustained by the Holy Spirit, can never be sinlessly perfect or absolutely clean in any degree prior to translation in the last day.” The Sanctuary and Perfection, p. 48. The author reveals what he thinks is meant by “reflecting the image of Jesus fully”; he makes a marked distinction between imputed and imparted sanctification; he warns against the dangers of perfectionism; he stresses the comfort of the gospel; he insists that the cleansed sanctuary is wholly in heaven; and he denies that Jesus assumed sinful flesh. These are only a few of the topics he touches, but the writer of the foreword should not go into so much detail that the reader will be deprived of the joy of discovery.
