The BYU Beard: I Mustache you a Question: Op Ed (Writing 150) Miranda Tate

“Hey girl,” reads the popular internet meme, “Keep up the studying. It looks good on you.” “Hey girl. They say that dance is the language of the soul... Let’s talk.” It floods the internet, filling every social media website—Tumblr, Facebook, Instagram—not to mention every college girl’s heart. The Ryan Gosling meme is generally accepted as funny, cute, and ultimately encouraging for women everywhere. Not only is it accepted nation-wide, but this internet phenomena is also widely used and adored in modern “Mormon culture”: “Hey girl,” a favorite Mormon meme reads, “I think it’s time we moved out of the singles’ ward. If you know what I mean.” Furthermore, BYU’s The Universe used this meme to excuse the fall issue’s tardiness: “Hey girl,” it read, “I’ve waited for you this long. Can you wait till October for our next issue of The Universe?” Best known for his role in The Notebook and other popular movies, Ryan Gosling’s soft brown hair, defined jawline, and shocking blue eyes make him a singular heartthrob. One last thing—the light scruff that follows his jawline and defines his face—is the favorite of many, but completely and utterly prohibited here on BYU campus.

Ever wonder about the honor code policy regarding shaving? Did you know seven out of the sixteen presidents of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints had beards? Miranda Tate, an undergraduate student at BYU, wrote this read as part of an Op Ed contest, and like many she finds it intriguing that mustaches are A-OK but beards aren’t given a fighting chance!
