Have you ever wondered why Owls are mysterious? Do you have a fascination with Owls, or are you just generally curious about the night crawlers? Well, you're in luck! In this book, you'll find out a lot of information about Owls than you've ever imagined, some may even be an eye opener for you. Owls are very riveting birds, one that other birds are likely afraid of...which is why you probably see fake owls on top of buildings and such; to keep other birds away.

There are over two hundred species of birds, with the most popular being the Barn Owl, Long-eared Owl, and Snowy Owl. Barn Owls are pale and strictly nocturnal, which makes it easier for them to prey on their meals silently. During the day, they hide in very quiet places. At night, they hunt over unsecured grasslands. They are very much different from other owls, they make a different sound. You can hear hissing noises coming from them and the young owls and the females, prior to birthing, make food begging calls. Although it isn't easy to tell whether a Barn Owl is male or female, it is common that the females have darker brown feathers around their faces, as well as darker bars on their tails and small black spots on their chests. The males are lighter and more of a pure white color underneath. Interesting fact: in order for Barn Owls to survive and breed, they must eat around 5,000 prey subjects a year. The mammals they prey on are usually voles, wood mice, and shrews. The Long-eared Owl is one of the owls that look quite humorous, due to its ears that point straight up, as if they were exclamation marks.

They are also nocturnal and they like to hide in places that they'll blend into, which make them hard to find. They are great listeners which makes it very easy for them to catch their prey in completely darkness. Long-eared Owls are able to swallow their prey whole. The oldest Long-eared Owl is at least twelve years and one month old. Unfortunately, it was banned in New York, but later found in Canada. The Snowy Owl has such a beautiful look that causes even other animals to want to take a look. Snowy Owls spend their hotter days in the Arctic Circle hunting in broad daylight. Male Snowy Owls are dark brown when they're in their youth and get whiter as they get older. The female Snowy Owls keep the dark markings throughout their lives. Snowy Owls are known to be territorial on their breeding spots, so much that they battle with other Snowy Owls to defend their areas when they feel that it's being threatened. Unlike other Owls, the Snowy Owl is very active during the day. They will hunt at all hours and they eat more than one thousand and six hundred lemmings per year.
